Dead.

Sylvania, Ga., July 14.—Two brothers, Joe and Herman Bazemore, prominent screen county farmers, were killed about 8 o'clock tonight on the Millen road, about four miles from Sylvania, by County Policeman J. V. Dolan.

The Bazemores were in an automobile with two of their children, a boy and a girl, who were sitting in the rear seat, when the county officer stopped the car in front of the home of Fred Waters, for the purpose of searching it for liquor.

Both of the Bazemores were killed instantly. All of the information obtainable here tonight came from the player and Deputy Sheriff L. A. Dickey, who was with Dolan, but who says he did not shoot.

According to Dolan and Dickey, the Bazemores were driving with two small children in the rear seat, when they were stopped by Dolan for the purpose of looking for moonshine liquor. They say they had reason to believe the brothers were hauling liquor. Dolan says he fired when it became apparent to him that the brothers were prepared to shoot at him.

The brothers were sitting on the front seat. Dolan fired twice and killed both of them instantly. Their bodies collapsed and they were dead without uttering a sound, it was said. The wounds indicated that they were shot with buckshot. The two children, son and daughter of Herman Bazemore, were on the back seat. They escaped injury, though they were much frightened. Joe Bazemore was driving the car.

After the shooting, Officer Dolan drove the car into Sylvania, reported the case to the authorities and turned the bodies over to undertakers. Joe is survived by his widow and four children, while Herman leaves a widow and five children. Both families are widely known.

Sheriff J. J. Griffin, of Screen county, reported that examination of the automobile showed that two kegs of liquor were concealed in it at the time of the shooting. He would give no details of the affair.

How the Family Can Start Every Day Right

There is one way for a fellow and his family in Atlanta to start the day right.

If he and his folks begin early with a hot breakfast and The Atlanta Constitution, they will be sure of a timely start, plenty of nourishment till lunch and a true start on world affairs and local happenings.

This is the way that hundreds of thousands of readers begin their days—and more and more constantly are finding that almost as important as their breakfast is their copy of The Constitution, which—fifteen years before any other Atlanta newspaper was in existence—began telling the world about Atlanta and Atlanta about the world. By doing so truthfully, The Constitution has come to be recognized throughout more than half a century as the certain source of news and advertising information that is accurately gathered from sources that are honest.

COUNCIL COMMITTEE

Permanent Registration

by Representatives.

Declaring that they cannot approve any measure that would submit the question of tax increase to the people, and declining to support amendments to the charter of Atlanta which would establish a permanent city registration list, or reduce the percentage of council members necessary to override the zoning commission, Representatives Bessie Kempton and John Y. Smith, of the Fulton delegation, Monday night issued a statement explaining their stand on the bill containing a number of proposed charter revisions.

At the same time Representative Joe Wood, the third Fulton member, planned to attend a meeting of the city charter revision committee Wednesday afternoon to ascertain the full facts concerning the committee's attitude on the three charter changes in question and to decide on a course of action. Miss Kempton and Mr. Smith also will be invited to this meeting.

In their statement, Miss Kempton and Mr. Smith declined to reply directly to charges from Mr. Wood that efforts were being made to suppress the desires of the city government, contenting themselves with an outline of their position on the three changes involved.

"A raise in the tax rate at this time," they asserted, "would do so much damage to Atlanta that we cannot even give our approval to the passage of a bill which would submit the question of a tax raise to the people. This city ought not to be subjected to the strife and bitterness of such an election at such a time as this."

"Prior to 1921 the tax rate of Atlanta was 1.14 per cent. In 1921 the tax rate was raised from 1.14 to 1.12 per cent."

In 1922 the charter was amended by the following language:

"The present taxation rate of $1.50 per annum, provided in the charter of sections 4 and 5 of the charter amendment approved August 4, 1921, shall never be increased, but the mayor and council of the city of Atlanta may, in their discretion, reduce said amount at any time."

"So we see that in 1922 the people of Atlanta were promised that there

HARDWICK DEBATE OFFER IS REFUSED

Senator Harris Says People Know His Record and Speaking Tour Is Not Necessary.

United States Senator William J. Harris Monday night stated that he would decline the offer of Thomas W. Hardwick, candidate for United States senator from Georgia, to divide time with him on a speaking tour of the state.

"The people of Georgia know the records of Mr. Hardwick and myself quite well," Senator Harris stated. "I think they have made up their minds on this matter and I see nothing to be accomplished by a joint debate. I made 500 speeches from March until December last year, speaking in every county in the state, and in so far as I know there is no demand on the part of the people of the state for further addresses."

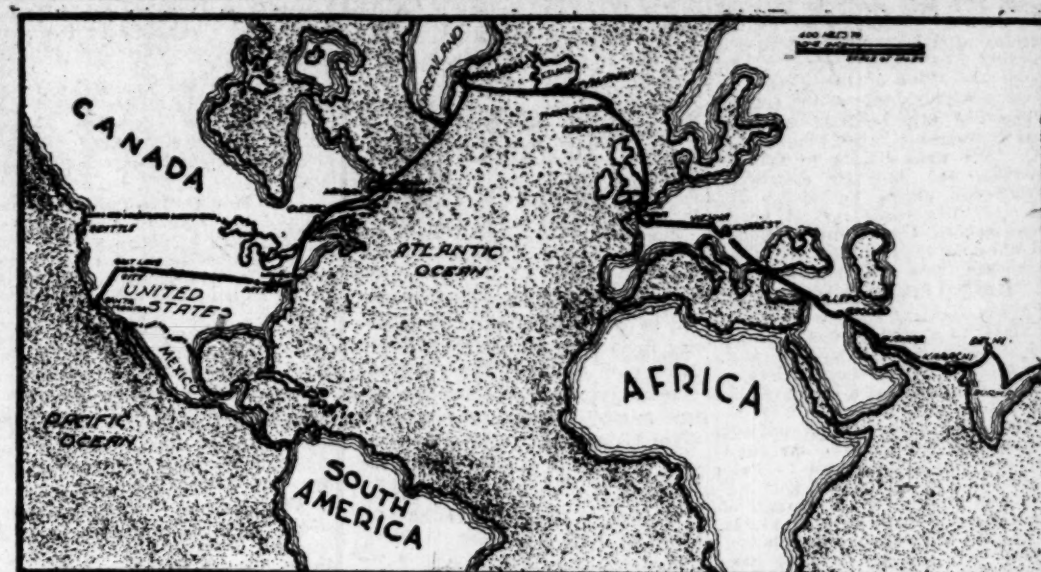

"I am enjoying my vacation and meeting my friends in Georgia, and will continue to spend my time among them until congress convenes in December."

Mr. Hardwick, in his letter to Senator Harris, stated that he would attack the senator's public record, and would make a point of so in Senator Harris' presence. He offered to divide his time at Hawkinsville next Saturday, in the first of his speeches at each of the speaking appointments that he will make during his canvass of the state.

Just before the "Barnesville Blues" left Barnesville Sunday for the annual camp at St. Simons they were addressed by Senator Harris and his brother, Major General P. C. Harris, former adjutant general of the army. The senator and his brother were visiting relatives in Barnesville and returned to Atlanta Monday, where the senator has established headquarters at Hotel Ansley.

Senator Harris Monday received an invitation from Raiford Fallgatter, of Savannah, in behalf of Chatham county and the various organizations of Savannah, to attend the water carnival to be staged by the Motor Boat club on July 24, 25 and 26 at Savannah.

American Globe Fliers Nearing Goal

With the largest and most dangerous part of their adventure behind them, the American round-the-world fliers are speedily winging their way from India to England. They now are in Paris. 30 PRETTY GIRLS BEAUTY ENTRANTS UPON FIRST DAY

Biltmore Hotel Offers
Terrace and Ballroom for Judging of "Miss Atlanta" Event.

DON'T BE BASHFUL

Staff photographers of The Constitution will be assigned to various bathing pools from day to day to take photographs of prospective applicants for the title of "Miss Atlanta" in the National Beauty tournament without cost.

All who desire to enter the tournament are urged not to be bashful, but to come right up to the photographers and ask to be photographed. Every consideration will be shown entrants; the field is open; everybody's welcome. So walk right up to the staff photographers and tell them to snap you and enter your name in the lists of beauty.

The first day for entries in The Constitution's tournament to send this city's fairest daughter to Atlantic City to compete, as "Miss Atlanta," for the title of "Miss America" in the National Beauty tournament, brought 30 entries in addition to those who had already announced their intention of participating.

The day also brought to the management of the tournament an invitation from the Biltmore hotel to stage the judging of the tournament in its gorgeous Georgian ballroom.

At the same time plans were made for enrolling a great number of pretty Atlanta girls in the event today. Staff photographers of The Constitution will be stationed from 3 to 4:30 o'clock this afternoon at Grant park and at Piedmont park, when beauties are again invited to fill out the entry blank at the end of this article, present it to the photographers and be formally entered in the race for "Miss Atlanta's" crown.

The photographers, who were stationed Monday afternoon at Grant park and Grant park pools, reported that

Savannah, Ga., July 14.—Forced by conditions, which Tybee town council regards as shocking, to take vigorous steps to stop the practice of dressing and undressing in automobiles, an ordinance has been passed prohibiting the custom and imposing severe penalties for violation.

Many persons, it is stated, dress and undress in automobiles in broad daylight on the main streets of Tybee, changing from street clothes, while sitting in machines. Residents of Tybee, visitors to the island, and members of the town council have been shocked at the practice, which appears to be on the increase.

The ordinance makes it unlawful for anyone to dress or undress in a motor vehicle or any other vehicle of any kind whatsoever within the corporate limits of the town of Tybee. It is proposed to take summary measures to bring this practice to an end as one which is harmful to public decency and morals.

Old Clothes Buyer Named Accomplice Of Mass Murderer

Hanover, Germany, July 14.—In the hope of buying up cheaply the clothing of victims of Friedrich Haarmann, the mass murderer, a 23-year-old dealer in second hand clothing, named Hans Grans, acted as Haarmann's accomplice, according to evidence given at a hearing of the case today.

Grans, who has served several prison terms for thefts, is said systematically to have brought victims to Haarmann's lair in order to get their clothing after they had been slain and their bodies disposed of.

New Conference.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

London, July 14.—The inter-allied conference which will assemble in the foreign office Wednesday morning for the purpose of putting the Dawes report on reparations into effect, will open in a decided atmosphere of optimism.

When the tentative arrangements for the meeting were concluded between Premiers MacDonald and Herriot at Paris last Thursday, the French premier characterized the occasion as the best day for the entente since the armistice was signed, and today competent American and British observers declared they hoped that within a fortnight the deliberations would be productive of an arrangement which will end once and for all time the quarrels and misunderstandings that have been continuing among the nations of Europe since the hostilities of the great war.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.
New York, July 14.—Tammany Hall today chose General Sessions Judge George Washington Olvany as grand chief to succeed the late Charles F. Murphy, and voted its "undivided and loyal support" to the Davis-Bryan ticket and the "progressive and forward-looking platform" of the national democratic party.

The vote for Judge Olvany, before it was made unanimous by the 68 men and women representatives of 23 districts, was reported to have been 23 to 13 for Martin G. ("Marty") McCall.

"The call is too strong to resist," Judge Olvany told the executive committee of Tammany Hall.

"In a few days I shall resign from the bench and undertake to carry on the work so ably, unselfishly and successfully performed by Charles F. Murphy for more than 22 years," Judge Olvany's statement continued. "Our first great public duty will be to roll up a great vote for our national ticket."

The election of Judge Olvany, a former district leader of Tammany, was a compromise between an active leader upon whom the district chiefs insisted, and a man from the ranks, as advocated by those who caused Surrogate Foley's election in May. Roosevelt's Strength Was

PLAN IS TO FORCE ELECTION INTO HOUSE

Long Deadlock at Gotham Convention May Have

BY MARK SULLIVAN.

Washington, July 14.—We have now entered upon a three-party contest. It is a three-party contest of a kind different from any that has ever occurred in recent American history. It must not be confused with the three-party contest of 1912, when the progressive party was in the race; for between the situation of 1912 and the situation of 1924 there is little similarity.

The difference lies in the fact that the strength of Roosevelt and the progressives in 1912 was distributed all over the country, whereas La Follette's strength is concentrated in a few states. That makes a great deal of difference, as will presently be seen. Unhappily it must be said that the situation of 1924 is more portentous of a disturbing outcome, for it contains more than the possibility, almost the probability, that the election may be thrown into congress and that as a result there may be in congress next winter a deadlock more formidable and much more disturbing than the one at New York last week.

No Hope of Victory.

It will be La Follette's purpose to manage his campaign in such a way as to throw the election of the president into the house. La Follette has no expectation or hope of getting a larger popular vote than Davis or Coolidge. He does not expect to win in terms of the popular vote. What he expects and what he can do is to carry enough states to bring about a situation in which the election will have to be thrown into congress.

SEVEN BUILDINGS HIT BY LIGHTNING

Street Car Service Stopped
For Half an Hour—Police Station Prisoners
Are Badly Frightened.

Lashed by a wind of tornado-like proportions a terrific storm descended upon Atlanta shortly before 6 o'clock Monday and for the better part of an hour swept the heart of the city.

Street-car service was completely stopped for 30 minutes and the torrential rains drove through the downtown streets and virtually cleared them of pedestrian traffic. Automobiles were caught in the jam of traffic caused by the street-car breakdown and during the busiest home-going hour of the day the work of transporting Atlanta's hordes of workers was held at a standstill.

From the residential districts came reports of crashing of trees and poles in all sections with the accompanying contribution of traffic delays as many shade trees which line the streets and avenues were hurled across the roadways. It is thought that the total storm damage will not exceed $20,000.

Both the Georgia Railway and Power company and Southern Bell Telephone company escaped with small damages, considering the severity of the storm. Although high tension wires between Atlanta and the power plants at Tallulah Falls and Clayton were damaged, the major loss to the power company was in interruptions to service.

A regulator, blown out by lightning, halted service on the Marietta street and North avenue car lines for several hours, and trees falling across trolley wires cut off service on the Fourteenth street and Buckhead lines. However, the entire force of repair men was put to work, service on all lines being resumed Monday night.

TRANS-ATLANTIC RACE
NOW SEEMS PROSPECT.

Rome, July 14.—When the American "round-the-world" fliers make their dash across the Atlantic, they may be racing an Italian aviator on the trans-oceanic flight to the United States. Antonio Locatelli, Italian airman who planned to fly to the North Pole with Amundsen, is expected to leave by air for the United States at the end of July.

His route will be via France, England and Ireland to Greenland. There he will make a number of trial flights to familiarize himself with ocean weather conditions, and will then hop to Canada. He hopes to reach New York in the middle of August.

BY JOHN O'BRIEN.

Paris, July 14.—"Who won the Olympic games?"

That was the first question asked by Lieutenant Lowell Smith, leader of the American round-the-world fliers, when he got his breath after the storm of shouts and congratulations which greeted the daring airman as they arrived in Paris.

"That's fine!" he exclaimed when informed that the United States had won, easily.

His tired, drawn face suddenly had lightened with excitement. Then a shadow, of some far-away thought, flashed across it.

"I've been worried," he said. "We heard—back there—that we were losing."

Fliers Feel "Fine."

The modest aviator, hero of an exploit that has centered world attention on his men and ships, had thought first of America's standing in the world of sport, had longed for his country's triumph. "Back there"—was it in Bucharest, or beside the Bosphorus, or under the burning skies of Baghdad—someone has worried him with the news that his countrymen were going down to defeat.

Asked how he felt after his 18,000 miles of flying, Smith answered with his brief stock expression.

"Fine! I was sick a few days. That made flying pretty difficult. Then I cracked my rib—working on one of the planes—but it's much better now."

Hop to Japan Was Worst.

Slowly, with many questions, stories of his experiences were drawn out. "The toughest part of the journey was through Alaska to Japan," he said. "The rest was comparatively easy. Its ease gave us great confidence. We're sure to make good now."

"I don't think Iceland will bother us," Smith added.

Thus, briefly, he dismissed the long days of Arctic flight, the trip down the coasts of Japan and the hot, dangerous flight above Siam. Then his BLESS THE LORD, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits; who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction.—Psalm 103:2-4.

ELECTING A PRESIDENT.

The Constitution has had several inquiries as to the possibility of the election of a president this year being thrown into the house of representatives and as to the method of selection thereafter.

These inquiries arise, of course, from the fact that Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, is a candidate for president on an independent progressive platform, with the general belief that he may carry a few of the central northwestern states, such as Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and the Dakotas.

The fundamental law providing for the election of a president and vice president in the electoral college, and thereafter in the house of representatives, should the college be unable to elect, is contained in the 12th amendment to the federal constitution.

There are 534 votes in the electoral college, and it requires a majority to elect a president. That is, it requires 266 votes. It is figured that if La Follette should get from 50 to 60 votes, as he claims he will get, and that if there should be no landslide for either Davis or Coolidge, both candidates polling approximately the same electoral strength, then, in that event, the house of representatives would have to be resorted to according to constitutional law.

That is true; and in that event the states must vote as a unit. New York, for instance, would vote a single unit, just as Rhode Island, or Nevada, or Montana—or Georgia, as for that matter. Hence the uncertainty of it.

It is no occasion for alarm. The same pre-election speculation was indulged in in 1912, when Roosevelt led a third party. There was a landslide for Wilson.

It is not probable, though of course possible, that the election of a president will be thrown into the house in 1924.

On the other hand, with the strong possibility that La Follette may take the electors in some of the radical states of the northwest, which states are nominally republican, this ought to be a good year for democratic success.

And with the solidarity of the party being so rapidly and so commendably accomplished, it is not unlikely that the next president of the United States will, indeed, be John W. Davis—as able, as sound, as safe, as dependable a leader as the democrats of this country could possibly have chosen.

LIFE INSURANCE.

The newspapers of Atlanta have recently been running a series of general life insurance advertisements that have not only had strong appeals, but most valuable educational features.

These advertisements have not been in the interest of any one company or any one class of insurance. On the contrary, they have simply most forcibly pointed out the many and unassailable reasons why life insurance should be the one objective of every person who values the future, and who cherishes the hope of accumulating an estate or of leaving a trust for the loved ones.

Dependency in old age is one of the most depressing situations that one can contemplate, and yet it is a matter of statistics that a great majority of people beyond 60 are dependent upon others for their support.

A great majority of heads of families leave their families without visible means of support, and a great deal of the suffering in this world is caused by the lack of foresight and judgment in accumulating a competence through this one channel that is open to all of healthy bodies and minds.

The annual life insurance premium, when paid, if persisted in, and the insured holds to his insurance equity as he would to that in any other tangible property of undoubted value, is the best-paying savings account that it is possible for one to establish.

Every person should give serious thought to life insurance.

WHY AMERICA WINS.

It is proverbial for America to win the Olympics.

When the games were revived in 1896 at Athens the American teams won the track and field contests with ease.

In 1900 in Paris it was the same story. In 1904 when the games were brought to this side of the water—St. Louis—again they won. In 1908 in London Americans were again crowned the kings of the circle. Ditto 1912. Ditto 1920 at Antwerp.

And now at Paris the Americans are again leading by a large margin. At the jumping pits, over the hurdles, in the white circles, American athletes are supreme, and Europeans, famed for centuries before the white man set foot on North American soil for their athletic prowess, now wonder what on earth is the reason and why on earth is the record unbreakable.

True there are Britishers who beat us in the sprints, as did Harold Abrahams last week in the 100 meters. There are Finns who run us "into the ground," as do the Ritolas and the Nurmis. There are spear hurlers who beat us in the javelin throw. Nevertheless, in seven international competitions Americans have dominated the field.

It is interesting to study the "why" of it all. Is it not because Americans take their athletics more seriously? Indeed study and training in athletics as the soldier trains for the infantry or the artillery?

That undoubtedly is the answer. The American college athlete is superlatively trained. His every movement is analyzed and he is fitted to that specialty to which he is or can become best equipped; or if not available for the tests he is sidetracked without fuss or fear. It is simply a survival of the fittest in which titles play no part, and in which prestige cuts no figure.

The American coach wants an athlete, and he wants him qualified whether he comes from the Knicker classes of New York's "400" or the brawny masses of the southern hill country.

Technique, in which is involved the finer points of the game, and not social position, has made the American athlete supreme.

SIMPLE FUNERALS.

The simplicity which marked the funeral of Calvin Coolidge, Jr., gives renewed emphasis to a striking tendency of the present day—a tendency especially pronounced among people of taste and refinement—to eliminate pretentious funeral rites and treat death with composed dignity and humility of spirit.

Dignified simplicity in the presence of death has not always been a characteristic of the human race. Egyptian kings expended untold labor and wealth in the erection of huge pyramids which they vainly hoped would protect their bodies to the end of time; Indian princes fashioned marble tombs of surpassing magnificence over the ashes of their departed queens; and in all times—even to the present—men, possessing smaller means but equal extravagance in taste, have reared ornate and expensive structures as their last resting places on conspicuous spots in the uncouth cemeteries of the world.

What with the studied wailing of hired mourners, the beating of tomtoms, the blare of trumpets, the imposing parade and the blatant display of the habiliments of sorrow, noise and pretense have ever played a conspicuous part in the mortuary rites of mankind.

Noise and display in the presence of death and self-advertisement by elaborate tombs, or otherwise, after life has ceased, do not appeal to minds of a superior type.

"Burn my body and scatter my ashes to the winds," directed Joaquin Miller. "Bury me simply and cheaply on the old home farm," was the request of John Burroughs. Dr. Graham Bell found a fitting resting place on a mountain top among the scenes of his boyhood, and the late Lord Northcliffe was laid to rest in the unpretentious little cemetery of Saint Maryleke.

"What shall you do with my body?" exclaimed a great British explorer when facing death in the frozen regions of the Antarctic. "All the world has been my home. One spot is as good as another. Bury me where I fall!"

Madison Square Garden has been converted into a swimming pool. "After me the deluge!"

Let us have more faith in humanity than is expressed in this paragraph from the usually optimistic New-castle Courier: "We often find that people who want to do something for us want to do us for something."

A Blessing to Humanity.

The Lowry Independent pays this tribute to the screen-wire man: "Whenever a fly gets past the screen door and plagues you by his investigation of the hills and hollows of your mayhem, just be thankful that you are not living in the days of forty or fifty years ago. In those days screens were not. When the Missouri pioneer sat himself down at the table to eat, one or more of his family were delegated to keep the flies off the food in order to give the diner a chance at the food. Leafy branches from the trees were sometimes used for shoo-flies, while the more particular air often used fly-chasers made of paper cut into long strips and fastened to a stick in the form of a witch's broom. The first screens were muslin. Later came the wire screens of today."

HEALTH TALKS

BY WILLIAM BRADY, M. D.

DYSPEPSIA—IT AIN'T NO MO.

A quaint query turned up in the mail the other day—just as a silver dollar occasionally turns up at the store. The silver dollar referred to, well, not a rarity at any rate. Now one has to go west of the Mississippi to collect the cartwheels, and out west one has to exercise the most positive determination not to become exhausted carrying around the change from a 10-dollar note.

When I made my first big mistake and started in to practice medicine on private patients—of course I had practiced thoroughly on hospital inmates for a while first—dyspepsia was a mighty handy diagnosis. Most patients kinda liked it; they seemed to consider dyspepsia a distinction, like gout and neurasthenia and a few other meaningless or not entirely harmless suggestions of that sort. So I had a fine assortment of dyspeptic cases under my neglect or maltreatment.

I practiced on them about everything the romantics of the medical world have dreamed up, from diet to drugs. I distinguished several varieties of dyspepsia, and had special varieties of each under my observation for a time. I even labelled a few of my most atrocious cases "starch dyspepsia," for some near chemists had just discovered that the fermentation of sugars and starches produces more or less "gas."

I am really ashamed to go on with this confession and I have carefully waited several years to make it—I notice a doctor generally waits a reasonable time before making such confessions—but this quaint query brings it all back again. My correspondent wishes to know what I notice of dyspepsia—does it or doesn't or prescribe, but suggest, that is his word—that I would suggest for a "bad case of dyspepsia" which he has had, he assures me, for three years. But the lives east of the Mississippi but far from the Missouri. Nevertheless I am going to be honest with him. I can afford to tell the truth in a case like this, because the correspondent is not a patient of mine and I shall feel no chagrin if he concludes to try another doctor.

Dyspepsia is purely and simply a doctor's lie.

Now understand me, a doctor's lie is often a good and noble thing, with the highest and purest motive behind it. A doctor who doesn't lie isn't much of a doctor any more. But the dyspepsia lie—it was useful enough in the dim days when we doctors just quietly buried our mistakes and "no complaint—everybody satisfied." But about 10 or 15 years ago there developed in this country, thanks to the earnest endeavors of none other than the doctor himself, a more wholesome and intelligent feeling in regard to the study of serious or fatal disease conditions through scientific methods of examination and particularly a more sensible view of the practice of holding necropsies or "autopsies" in difficult, obscure, unusual or baffling cases. In short, through the efforts of the doctors themselves, the laity has attained a new and more intelligent attitude toward such studies, and among the many things we have learned from the post mortem investigations of disease is the nonentity of dyspepsia. We have learned that there is no such disease as dyspepsia, in other words, if you imagine yours is a case of dyspepsia, don't wait for the autopsy. Find out now what's really ails you and see if the doctor can't do something for you.

Just In Passing

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON

During a stay of three weeks in New York, in unbroken attendance upon the national democratic convention from the hour that Madame Case, of the Metropolitan Opera company sang the "Star Spangled Banner" until the gavel fell upon the sine die adjournment some fifteen days later, I had occasion, of course, to observe the game of politics played under circumstances never known before in this country, and to which even veterans were unaccustomed.

With one exception I have attended every national convention of both parties since 1896, when, as a boy just out of college, I sat within ten feet of the handsome, dashing young orator of the Plate at Chicago when a Georgian impulsively placed him in nomination for the presidency, and a group of enthusiastic, hysterical delegates, with a shout of "Bryan," trotted him around the pit on their shoulders.

I watched the impregnable Hannafairbanks machine nominate McKinley the same year; and subsequently at Philadelphia, in 1900, I saw the same machine choke down and its great driving wheel cease to revolve when, by popular acclaim, Theodore Roosevelt was nominated for the vice presidency—a tidal wave for the Rough Rider hero of San Juan that no wall or political fiction could hold back.

In 1920 I saw the apparently invincible column of delegate strength behind General Leonard Wood, at Chicago, beaten back mercilessly by a handful of Lowden delegates, only to see Lowden in turn crumble and fall before the Thompson machine, while Harding, a 100 to 1 starter, trotted in across the lines.

For years I have watched and studied these plays on the political chessboard, and many and many a time have I thought of that familiar little couplet—

"For when the great secret comes
To write against your name,
He writes not that you won or lost,
But how you played the game."

It was not altogether a guess, therefore, at the state democratic committee meeting in Atlanta on January 17 last when I declared that neither McAdoo nor Underwood would be the nominee of the New York convention, but that Senator Ralston would probably be named.

Senator Ralston would have been nominated had he permitted his name to remain before the convention. Nothing could have stopped it when the McAdoo-Smith deadlock crumbled but his own irrevocable determination not to accept the honor.

Some of the Smith states did not want him because they regarded him unavailable on account of the alleged klan domination in Indiana politics. But this would have been brushed aside—as disastrous to the hopes of his friends as it seemed at a time—had he allowed his friends to hold his name to the score cards. He would not. His position was adamant; and then it was that the faithful 60 to 70 delegates who had remained consistently behind John W. Davis took courage.

From the moment that Senator Ralston for the second time—the last time with immutable resolve—told his friend Taggart by long distance "phone not to let another vote be cast for him; when Indiana even was forced with bowed head to leave its idol; from that moment the nomination of John W. Davis was inevitable. I saw it quickly, and readers of The Constitution were so apprised.

Why did I say, in January, that neither McAdoo nor Underwood could be nominated?

That question has been asked of me 600 times, I conscientiously believe. At the time there were no revelations connecting the Californian with the Doheny interests through his law practice; nor was there any documentary evidence, such as the now famous Nathan Bedford Forrest letter, connecting him with a secret klan influence.

The answer is—First, by deduction. Mr. McAdoo, since the 1920 presidential campaign, had moved from the east to the far west in order to give broader expression to his extremely liberal political ideas, sometimes radical, and to find an environment more receptive and more sympathetic.

The east, headed by New York, in which is included also the central states of Illinois and Ohio, with their large voting units in the convention can easily create a veto.

Any student of political science could easily foresee that this veto at all hazards would be concealed if not indeed organized against Mr. McAdoo.

Second, by appraisal of the mistake of pre-convention state campaigns for instructed delegates; and the reactionary principle of hog-tieing unsympathetic delegates under the unit rule.

Pre-convention state preferential campaigns always antagonize, and while they may, at enormous expense, create a bloc of delegates, as was created for Mr. McAdoo at New York, the final result is usually disastrous.

As an illustration McAdoo contested Ohio against its favorite son, Governor James M. Cox. Cox won. It is any wonder that when Cox withdrew his name from the national convention that McAdoo did not get a single one of the 48 votes, although the delegates were not under the unit rule and split among a half-dozen candidates?

Putting these two situations together it was impossible for me to see McAdoo the nominee at any stage of the campaign or convention, although he entered the latter with the largest bloc of votes ever arrayed behind a candidate except for a renomination. The reasons for the conclusion re-

Playing a Trick?

American newspapers recently carried a cabled dispatch from Paris to the effect that the literary circles of that city were quite excited over the finding of two manuscripts said to be in the handwriting of Napoleon. Of course there are plenty of state papers, army orders and letters of the Corsican in existence, but the latest find is said to be love stories, written by him while yet a lieutenant of artillery at Valence. If the manuscripts are genuine, they reveal the man who once "sprawled" over Europe as an eager lover even in the days preceding his rise. His later affection for Josephine de Beauharnais is well-known, with his pathetic and fateful ending. The heroine of the love stories is Eugene, whom he later gave in marriage to General Bernadotte, ancestor of the present king of Sweden. The only strange part about the manuscripts is a loose leaf found inside the cover on which appeared a declaration by Comte Charles de Montolon and the Baron Charles Monier, who were both great admirers of Napoleon. The only strange part about the manuscripts was a loose leaf found inside the cover on which appeared a declaration by Comte Charles de Montolon and the Baron Charles Monier, who were both great admirers of Napoleon.

There is no doubt that Napoleon ordered the examination and the declaration of authenticity. He was known to aspire in his younger days to be a writer. But he also said: "Some day I will play these Frenchmen a trick."

Secrets of the Ancients

Revealed in Missouri.

James Cummings, an automobile mechanic in St. Louis, Mo., stumbled on a discovery last week that changed his fortunes overnight from a man without a job to a millionaire. While repairing a copper gasket he dipped it in a chemical composition of his own making. The gasket sprang back to its bent form when he put it straighten it. He did not think much of the incident, but later one of his friends told him that if he could repeat the performance his fortune would be made. He had re-discovered the secret of hardening copper, lost more than 3,000 years ago when Egypt was at the height of its power and greatness. Cummings patented the chemical composition he used to repair the gasket and received a check of a million and a half from a Detroit firm for the use of his discovery. It is said the auto mechanic's home is now besieged by auto salesmen, real estate experts, bond dealers and insurance agents and he is receiving hundreds of requests for charity. Cummings is going to live somewhere in the country, where "the wife and eight kiddies can get plenty of air." That fellow seems to have good sense in addition to good luck.

Government Nervousness.

Though the German reichstag is not in session at the present time, federal police staged a raid in the building with the object of trying to discover documentary evidence of communist murder plots in the country, in the lockers and desks of the red members. The German government is alternately seeing black and red. Black when monarchist conspiracy talk is in the air and red when a communist cause they found what they were looking for. The papers discovered this time show a gigantic secret military organization formed throughout Germany to fight General Ludendorff's swastika regiments. If we are to believe the reports from Germany everybody is engaged in secret drilling and getting ready to slash throats and throw bombs. Luckily for other nations the preparations are only for home consumption. A little more prosperity, another step on the road to normalcy and all these things will be "coups" will end in Germany and Marshal Ludendorff will be forced to sheathe his sword and may as well change his spurs from his feet to his elbows, where they will make excellent back scratchers.

BITS OF NEW YORK LIFE

BY O. O. MCINTYRE

New York, July 14.—The most typical of all first-night audiences is the one that gathers in the galleries of the Folies. They do not go to see the show but to see each other. New Yorkers come down in their yachts and state stars are supplanted by understudies to attend.

The block in front of the theater is crowded with curiosity seekers from 5 o'clock until the curtain falls. They want to see close-ups of favorites of the screen and stage. And see society leaders aglow with jewels.

The same crowd is there. Hearst, Munsey and Brisbane, Ben Ali Haggin, the painter, with his stage-villain mustache. Big Burke with her new boy-bob. Ziegfeld himself and the lavender-tinted collar. Judge Gary, Barney Baruch and his brother, Sailing, who is in the theater in the back.

Morris Paul, who as Cholly Knickerbocker chronicles the doings of the social whirl. Tony Moreno, Dick Barthelmess and his wife, Mary Hay. Fred Stone and his daughter, Dorothy, who is his constant companion. A Vincent Astor, who has grown from a six-footer and is as tanned as the autumn leaf. Swope of the World, Morris Gest and his flowing black tie. The Duke of Vanities Fair, Glum Tey, Richard and the beaming Paul Whitehead.

This year the first-nighters missed Victor Herbert who each year wielded the baton on opening night. He was a figure as familiar as that of Diamond Jim Brady of a few years ago. As Gene Buck, Ziegfeld's man Friday, said: "The toughest audience in the world."

He means by that they are not given to applause. At the intermission the galleries are empty. The buzz of conversation is the only sound to be heard. As

MOTOR BUS BILL OCCUPIES HOUSE

After meeting at 10 o'clock Monday morning—one hour earlier than has been customary on Monday mornings in the past—the Georgia house of representatives adjourned shortly before 1 o'clock without having reached a vote on the motor-bus-line bill, which has been the business of the house with first place on the calendar since last Wednesday. Whether a vote is reached on the measure Tuesday or not remained in doubt Monday night, with indications that approximately ten more members still desire to speak on it. Under the rule adopted for this debate each speaker is limited to 15 minutes.

BAFFLED OFFICIALS BATTLE IN PROBE

Cartersville, Ga., July 14.—(Special.)—Although Sheriff Gaddis and his deputies have bent every effort to solve the mystery surrounding the death of Fred Bohannon, 18, whose body was found in a field near Cartersville July 5, nothing definite has yet developed. Horace Bruce, 18, companion of Bohannon on the ride that ended in the latter's death, is held in jail on orders of a coroner's jury.

Medical examiners said that indications were that Bohannon had been poisoned, but that there was no way of proving it.

"The mouth was burned as if by acid," Dr. Howard E. Felton, Bartow county physician, said.

The body was examined before a rough examination had been made, however, and we are not now sure that an examination of the viscera will indicate whether the boy was poisoned or not. Bruises on the body of the victim could have caused death, but it is not probable.

It was rumored at the sheriff's office tonight that there were two women involved in the mysterious death of the boy. However, Speaker W. Cecil Neill ruled that the records cannot be changed except by action of a majority of the house, and inasmuch as under the rules only those members present on Friday could vote—a minority—the latter part of the resolution was out of order. The vote to extend the rule of exclusion was unanimous on the part of the majority authorized to vote.

Beat Smoking Resolution.

The resolution to rescind the house rule against smoking was introduced several days ago by Representative Beattie Kempton, of Fulton. The rules committee brought in an adverse report Monday and the house sustained this report by a vote of 68 to 59.

A point of order was raised during this debate, that under Rule 27 of the house, members personally interested in questions before house could not vote, and therefore that all smokers should be barred from voting on this question.

However, Speaker Neill ruled that only those members smoking at the time would be barred from the vote. So the members, on behalf of the dignity of the book of rules, promptly voted down the amendment—and relit their cigarettes.

Representative Wimberly of Toombs then moved that the house resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider his resolution introduced last Thursday that a committee of three from the house and two from the senate be appointed to investigate his charges against the state public service commission. This motion was defeated, 71 to 61.

Wimberly Plan Again Defeated.

However, after Mrs. Don had made her speech, Representative Wimberly moved to reconsider. On the motion to reconsider, the aye and nay vote was ordered, and after an hour's time had been consumed over the matter, the Wimberly plan was again defeated, 62 to 77.

About half an hour was then devoted to speeches on the motor-bus-line bill and at 12:55 o'clock a motion to adjourn, put by Representative Bozeman, of Worth, was carried.

Wednesday the house and senate went to Athens where they will be guests of the city of Athens in order to inspect the University of Georgia, State College of Agriculture and State Normal school with a view to a better knowledge of conditions there when the question of approval of these state institutions comes up.

CUTTEN CLEANS UP ON CORN MARKET

Chicago, July 14.—One of the biggest "killings" on the Chicago Board of Trade in recent years was reported by brokers to have been made by Arthur W. Cutten, Chicago grain merchant and board of trade operator who sold 300,000 bushels of July corn to a glucose concern at a price around $1.10. His profits since corn advanced to 25 cents from 10 cents were estimated by brokers tonight at between $1,500,000 and $1,800,000.

In addition to his heavy deals in cash corn, Mr. Cutten, who terms himself a "cash grain merchant and dirt farmer and whose farm near Chicago is one of the show places of Du Page county, has also credited with having a large sum on the recent wheat advances of from 20 to 25 cents a bushel in the Chicago and Winnipeg markets.

Had Faith in Prediction.

His heavy profits, brokers said, were due to his faith in his prediction made some time ago that corn would take a jump. He followed this judgment persistently in his trading, his friends say, despite the fact that he was compelled to take large losses during May, when he was reported to have been compelled to pay for 4,000,000 bushels of cash corn bought on contract for May delivery.

He predicted corn would reach a dollar a bushel before the end of July and wet weather which has held the crop back made his forecast come true even sooner.

"I felt all along that corn was worth more money," he said tonight in discussing today's deal, "and that the Chicago stock which only a little while ago was the largest in the country would all be wanted. I have sold my grain into consumptive channels as prices moved up from 84 cents, the demand becoming more active as the price advanced. As I sold my cash corn I took July in exchange and have sold that out too on a steadily rising market."

Took Much Patience.

"It required patience for me to hold on to my corn, but the present market justified the correctness of my position. I began accumulating corn for delivery this month because I believed it would be hard to get. Farmers had not sold their grain owing to the backward spring, receipts have been small all over the country, and consumers have had to come to Chicago to get their supplies. I have sold about all my cash corn, but the situation is still tight. Receipts from the country are not likely to increase greatly for some time."

Mr. Cutten invariably has taken the farmers' side of the market and contended corn was worth more money even when the market was against him. He also predicted a higher price for wheat and still holds that position and has been one of the largest holders of futures in the Winnipeg market.

James A. Patten was also reported today to have made a considerable amount of money through the disposal recently of 2,000,000 bushels of oats purchased in May when no one wanted oats and when other dealers were predicting a big loss. Cash corn here sold for $1.13 today, within a cent of last year's high point, while July corn was quoted at $1.10.

Cop Tears Down Lady's Stocking For Marked Bill

Cambridge, Mass., July 14.—How far should an officer of the law go in search of evidence?

In the opinion of Police Sergeant Robert Douglas, he should go as far as he likes.

Douglas raided the home of Mrs. Annie Karalis after a "stool pigeon" had given her a marked dollar bill for some liquor.

Three times he searched the house without finding the dollar bill.

Then he had a happy thought. He tore down the woman's stocking and extracted the marked bill from a big roll of money.

Annie was furious when she appeared in East Cambridge court Monday, but she was held until October 1 to pay a $100 fine.

POLICE QUESTION BRANDED MINISTER

Battle Creek, Mich., July 14.—Rev. Oreg Van Loon, pastor of the Community church, Battle Creek, Mich., was branded a minister by police officers after having been in this section and the vicinity of the alleged crime.

Circumstantial evidence obtained today points to the fact that the two men seen on July 3 in the car, now identified as owned by Major McLeary, were on a mysterious mission into the territory in which the car was wrecked and abandoned, but all efforts today failed to uncover this mission.

Lieutenant Herron, of Washington, friend of Major McLeary, arrived this afternoon to assist Major S. M. Williams, of Asheville, and about 100 officers and public citizens engaged in the search.

1924 INSURGENCY CONTAINS THREAT

anism known as the electoral college. Of electoral votes each state has a number as large as the number of its senators, plus two as the number of its senators. For example, Utah, with two senators and two congressmen, has four electoral votes, while New York has 45.

This is exactly what Mr. La Follette hopes to prevent. He wants to carry, and is justified in hoping to carry, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Montana and the two Dakotas. If he carries these and no more, he will have 39 electoral votes. This might be enough to bring it about that Coolidge and Davis, if they should run comparatively even, would each have less than a majority.

If no one of the candidates for president has a majority, then the election is thrown into the lower house of congress, and in that situation we should probably have a disturbing factor in the person of Mr. Davis, who will have the choice, not the one presently to be elected.

Vote By State Units.

It is being remembered that in the house the vote is not by individual congressmen but by states. The entire delegation from each state votes as a unit, and each state has one vote.

It appears that the present lower house of congress is so distributed between parties as to make a deadlock probable. Of the 48 state delegations in congress, 25 have a majority of republicans, 19 are democratic and five are evenly divided between the two parties. Add to this the fact that three of the 23 so-called republican delegations are republican in name only. The republican congressional delegations from Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota are republican in name but follow the leadership of Charles Bryan.

No more need be said to show how fully the materials for a trying deadlock are ahead of us if the lower house of congress should start to ballot today. The lower house is not successful in making a choice by state units.

The senate, by a curious provision, drops all the candidates for president and proceeds to make a choice from among the candidates for vice president. And here arises a most interesting possibility, a possibility out of which we might get a laugh if it were not serious. The senate, if it comes to this last phase, will make the selection from among Dawes, Charles Bryan and La Follette's running mate, whoever that is to be. All this is disquieting enough at best. But suppose the La Follette party should ignore Bryan as the running mate to J. H. P. Follette, the best thing to do would be to bring in a man who would have a more promising title to the presidency than Dawes, even in a republican senate, so-called.

In short, if these complications, including the last one, should occur, the brother of William Jennings Bryan is Johnny-on-the-spot, sitting right on the doorstep of the white house. The stone that the builder hath rejected these many years, ever since 1896, is William J. Bryan. William J. is sure as death to come to the white house as ever he was, but Brother Charlie, by a curious combination of accident, is close to the builder's hand. Very much depends, of course, on whether the La Follette party should now take Charles Bryan for the yet unfilled vacancy on the vice presidential end of the La Follette ticket.

MISSING MAJOR REPORTED SEEN

Winston-Salem, N. C., July 14.—A man believed to be Major Samuel H. McLeary, missing army officer, was in a cafe at Mt. Airy, N. C., this afternoon, according to a long distance telephone message to the Winston-Salem Journal tonight.

The man was reported to have left Mt. Airy driving a Ford coupe and headed toward this city. Police officers tonight were guarding all approaches to the city in an effort to apprehend him if he entered the city.

According to the report from Mt. Airy, the man fitted the description of Major McLeary which has been circulated.

Asheville, N. C., July 14.—An all-day search of the territory surrounding Canton, where the automobile and personal effects of Major Samuel H. McLeary, missing army officer, were found Sunday afternoon, failed to reveal any evidence of the army officer ever having been in this section and the vicinity of the alleged crime.

Circumstantial evidence obtained today points to the fact that the two men seen on July 3 in the car, now identified as owned by Major McLeary, were on a mysterious mission into the territory in which the car was wrecked and abandoned, but all efforts today failed to uncover this mission.

Lieutenant Herron, of Washington, friend of Major McLeary, arrived this afternoon to assist Major S. M. Williams, of Asheville, and about 100 officers and public citizens engaged in the search.

Two Developments in Day.

Positive statement by Mrs. Luther Hall, who was asked for a bucket by the two strangers, that neither was Major McLeary, after she was shown a photograph of the officer, and finding a trench mirror and package of razor blades at a point where the wreckage was found, were the only definite developments today.

The theory that the automobile was stolen and brought to this section is fast gaining weight in the vicinity of Canton, where it is believed by officials to have been hidden after the car was wrecked and had run out of gasoline in an effort to give the men stealing the automobile an opportunity to escape.

The searching party, headed by Major Williams and Chief of Police Sumner, of Canton, worked the woods this morning and again in the afternoon without finding a single clue that might aid in solving the matter.

Residents of the Thickety section, in which the car was found, were ready and willing to lend assistance in the search.

TRIED TO CROSS MOUNTAIN

A great mail carrier, who met the automobile with the two strangers on the mountainside on July 3, gave information that leads to the theory that the men were making an attempt to cross the mountain. The road is seldom used and they were forced to turn back.

Rumor after rumor was current in Canton today, but all were without any evidence that would warrant being followed. The searching party spent the entire day working on information already developed.

The storage batteries, a spare tire and other accessories are believed to have been stolen from the car after it was ditched and steps may be taken to prosecute the thieves, it was learned tonight.

The facts, according to residents of Canton, are as follows: Two men driving an automobile owned by Major McLeary drove into Thickety section shortly after noon on July 3, and after an unsuccessful attempt to cross the mountain were forced to turn back. These two men, after stopping for water, drove into several roads leading into church yards and finally landed in a ditch, without gas, and left baggage and personal effects of Major McLeary in the bushes, about 50 yards from where they went into the ditch. The automobile was found on the evening of July 3, according to residents, and taken to the home of J. H. Clark, but no special attention was paid to the incident.

Major's Towel Found.

On July 11, Mr. Clark appealed to the Asheville citizens to assist him in locating the owner. About the same time a youth playing in the creek near where the car was wrecked found a towel bearing the name of Major McLeary. He gave it to his father and on Saturday, July 12, the father read in the paper for the first time the disappearance of the army officer.

He then, according to his own statement, with several other men searched in the vicinity of the point where the car was wrecked and on Sunday afternoon located the baggage and personal effects. These were turned over to the officers.

All efforts to learn the identity of the men driving the automobile on July 3 were without avail, and except

RAWLS, ALLEGED SLAYER, TO FACE TRIAL ON SEPT. 3

Savannah, Ga., July 14.—At the request of counsel for the defense, Judge McElmire, of the superior court, today reassigned the case of R. H. Rawls, charged with slaying A. Lawrence, to trial on Wednesday, September 3.

A. A. Lawrence, counsel for the defense, is out of the city on business, which is a legal ground for postponement. The case was originally set for July 25.

Walter C. Hartridge, the solicitor general, stated, as the case was ready to try the case and urged that it be tried as early as possible.

SENATOR ROBINSON FIRED FROM CLUB

Washington, July 14.—Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, minority leader during the last session, was expelled from the fashionable Chevy Chase Golf club here Monday by the board of directors, as a result of a dispute on the golf course several weeks ago when the senator knocked down another member of the club, Dr. James F. Mitchell, nationally known surgeon.

The vote for expulsion was unanimous. Alexander Britton, president of the club, said, Robinson was suspended temporarily by the board shortly after the incident, pending full investigation.

Neither Robinson, Mitchell, nor any of the three senators who were playing with the democratic leader were called before the board Monday, but written statements from all of them were presented and read at the meeting.

No action was taken against Mitchell, Britton said, as no charges were brought against him.

The action of the board closes an incident that attracted wide attention here because of those involved. Robinson was playing in a foursome with Senator Walsh, of Montana, permanent chairman of the democratic convention; Senator Kendrick, of Wyoming; and Senator Jones, of New Mexico, all prominent in the last session of the senate. The Arkansas senator was notified of his suspension, while in New York attending the convention, where he was mentioned as a "dark horse."

The trouble arose when a threesome in which Mitchell was playing attempted to go through the senatorial foursome. Robinson objected and he and Dr. Mitchell became engaged in an argument, which ended in Robinson's knocking the surgeon over a bench. Colonel Edward Clifford, former assistant secretary of the treasury, and his son, were playing with Mitchell.

MUNICIPAL LEAGUE MEETS HERE JULY 22

Savannah, Ga., July 14.—(Special.)—Announcement is made today that the Municipal League of Georgia, of which Gordon Saussey, of Savannah, is president, will hold its annual meeting at the Piedmont hotel at Atlanta, July 22. Themes for discussion have been prepared by leading members.

H. J. Fullbright, state tax commissioner, and J. H. Ballard, secretary of education, and F. H. McDonald, of the Georgia industrial bureau, are among the speakers.

For meager descriptions of them, officers are without a clue.

MISSING MAJOR BELIEVED SEEN

Winston-Salem, N. C., July 14.—A man believed to have been Major Samuel H. McLeary, missing United States army officer, was seen in Winston-Salem as late as midnight last night, according to R. E. Edwards, Galveston, Texas, who is here riding in the search for the officer.

He said today that he had learned that this man had stopped at a filling station between this city and Greensboro Saturday afternoon and that he had been seen walking barefooted on the streets here last night.

Mr. Edwards arrived here last night to begin his investigation. He said his information was that the man believed to be the missing major was traveling in a touring car different from the one in which he had left Norfolk and which was found near Canton, N. C., Sunday. The man was accompanied by two civilians.

The man seen here told the filling station man on Saturday that he had only enough money to buy one gallon of gasoline and asked if that would carry him here.

Mr. Edwards today said he considered it possible that the major's automobile had been driven to the western part of the state, either by the missing man or by others, and abandoned and that the officer then returned to this section of the state.

Mr. Edwards today enlisted the aid of the local police in an effort to trace the man seen here. He also is enlisting aid of Red Cross workers.

CHARLES W. BRYAN Yother Is High In Fort Shoot

The service company of the 1224 infantry held its weekly shoot at Fort McPherson, Ga., Sunday and thirteen enlisted men reported to Captain John D. McKibben at the 300-yard firing post. Private Yother made his first appearance Sunday and turned in a 125 for three ranges slow fire. First Sergeant Amory, who was high last week, got a bad start with a 35 at 200 yards, but managed to place second with 123. Captain McKibben caught Corporal Lowry on an off-day and took third with 108. Lowry was fourth with 104, which is one of the lowest scores ever turned in by him.

Captain McKibben picked three men to shoot on the company rifle team, Amory, Lowry and Yother. Corporal Reid showed up fairly well and it is likely that he will be fourth choice.

Savannah Ships Big Cotton Cargo To Russian Port

Savannah, Ga., July 14.—(Special.)—On the Savannah Cotton exchange today it was reported that the steamer Bussum sails from here today with a cargo of $1,000,000 worth of cotton for Murmansk, Russia.

The Bussum carried 13,352 bales, all middling or above in grade, valued at $150 per bale or more. In former times a cargo of value of half a million was notable. In all the recent shipments to Russia from Savannah total, with the ship "W. S. 60, 600 bales, valued at $900,000.

En route from Omaha, Governor Bryan reiterated previous statements that it was too early to talk national politics, declaring his chief concern at present was to get back on the job. He did, however, say that he was much concerned in the individual to be selected by the state democratic committee to make the November race for the governorship as he was in the desire that the man chosen represent the "progressive policies of the present administration."

"I am glad to get back to this homecoming from the crowded convention hall at New York was 'like letting a bird out of a cage.'"

DEATH DOSE IS GIVEN BY HARASSED WOMAN

"After This We Won't Be Tormented Day and Night By Those Awful Pests," She Declares.

"I had to get rid of them! I stood it all right as long as I didn't realize the real danger, but when I saw my baby threatened by this awful menace, I made up my mind to do some killing myself," declared the mild-mannered little woman when making her confession.

"After this, no flies, moths, mosquitoes, ants, or any other pests are going to live in my house to pollute our food and bring disease germs to my family. I gave them all a death dose of Fly-Flu, and you should have seen them drop. After this they won't be tormented by these pests again."

Fly-Flu instantly kills every species of insect life. Cannot stain or leave an unpleasant odor. It is absolutely harmless for humans, so safe to use, and kills bugs, lice, thrips and aphids that infest your plants and flowers. Keeps them out and does not injure vegetation.

Keep Fly-Flu in your house and insure freedom from insects. Substitutes can't and won't do the work. Get it at your druggist, grocer or general store. A big box for five with sprayer free. Try genuine Fly-Flu once and you will never be without it. (adv.)

Tilden Retains Clay Court Title by Beating Snodgrass

St. Louis, July 14.—Playing his usual faultless tennis, Big Bill Tilden defeated Harvey Snodgrass, of Los Angeles, Monday in the singles final of the National Clay Court Tennis tournament and staked down for another year the clay court singles title.

Tilden took three straight sets, 6-2, 6-1 and 6-1.

Snodgrass was hopelessly outclassed from the first. He could not play the net against the big Philadelphia, and repeatedly drove Tilden's smashes over the base line.

Snodgrass played the first two sets from the back court. He played the front court in the third set, but Tilden's crosses ran him to exhaustion.

Tilden Wins Quickly.

Tilden won so quickly that he averaged 12 minutes to each of the three sets.

The champion scored 29 game points to Snodgrass' 18 in the first set, 27 to 15 in the second, and 29 to 15 in the third.

MAXSON RICHARD JUBEL

OUT WHERE THE WEST BEGINS

By Grist Crawford.

Dobe Sam came ridin' from the range one summer day. Whoopin' and shootin' down the streets of Santa Fe; Thirty minutes later he was silent as the rocks.

Ridin' calm and peaceful in a little wooden box.

Alkali Ike laid down on the sand. And a rattlesnake bit him smack-dab in the hand.

The bite would have killed him (I honestly think).

But a passing cow-puncher gave like a big drink.

That at first was refreshingly pleasant and cool.

Then bit like an adder and kicked like a mule.

It cured him, all right, of the rattlesnake bite.

But he died from the liquor the very same night.

The Revelation.

The Sunday school teacher had been telling the children about some of the Biblical miracles and had just finished with the story about the loaves and fishes, telling them how a small quantity had been divided between many people.

"Aw, that ain't nothin'," piped up little George, "I've seen that. You ought to see my mother cut pie when we have unexpected company for dinner."

The telephone operator is the only individual who can eat onions at luncheon and get away with it.

Oh, Those Flappers!

A flapper, with rolled-up hair, went walking 'mid the horse rows. Potatoes filled their eyes with dirt. The corn was shocked and greatly hurt.

Carrots stood rooted in the ground. While apples up a tree were found. Cabbages covered up their heads. The lettuce covered in their beds.

While all the peaches who had seen turned, with envy, a vivid green.

Certainly.

We were joy riding.

My friend of girls was at the wheel. I looked at my watch, listened a bit, then murmured in her ear: "Peggy, I think we'd better head for town and stop at the first filling station."

We "headed" all right, and she stopped the car in front of a restaurant (one of the finest, too).

Now, dear Editor, would you call a restaurant a filling station?

Ross Williams told us the other day: "My wife and me don't go in society much. Her hair's still long."

The Solution.

"So many men are forever complaining of domestic troubles. My wife has always obeyed me implicitly."

"How on earth do you manage it, old chap?"

"On our wedding day I told her to do exactly as she pleased."

Etiquette.

The books of etiquette are filled with interesting information. You learn that, when you drop a fork, you should not wipe it off upon the stocking of your hostess.

And on page 142—or is it page 241—the books of etiquette inform us that, upon pain of being nobody in our own exclusive set, when a lady enters a room, a gentleman should arise, no matter what he may be doing.

Mr. Brown was seated and he was very busy. His hands and arms and lap were full of something warm and frilly and perfumed.

Nonetheless, when a lady entered the room abruptly, he arose, forgetful of his burden, allowing it to drop to the floor.

But this was not because Mr.

Brown was even acquainted with the dictates of the books of etiquette. The lady who had entered the room was his wife, and the bundle, with which he was occupied, was her pretty maid.

The Jingle-Jangle Counter.

Skeeters like the latest style. Bare arms make them wink and smile.

Joe boarded out—get indignation. Found a cook and then popped the question.

Such a funny thing it was, my dears. Mabel bobbed her hair and found two ears.

A little nonsense now and then is relished by the wives of men.

Compensated.

Mr. Allen, a man about town in a certain city in Oklahoma, never missed an opportunity to make conversation with the Indians who frequently came to town.

One day, while talking to a Cherokee whom he had known for some time, Mr. Allen discovered that the Indian had been expounding religion to his tribesmen in their settlement some miles distant.

"How much money do you get for preaching?" asked Mr. Allen.

"The Indian hunched his blanket a little closer as he replied: "Ten dollars."

"For how long?"

"It seems to me that's d—d poor pay," said Mr. Allen.

"Huh, me d—d poor preacher."

If you want to get round a charming girl you can do so better with your arms than with your conversation.

White Fang

BY JACK LONDON

They did not remain in one place, but traveled across country until they regained the MacKenzie river, down which they slowly went, leaving it often to hunt game along the smaller streams that entered it, but always returning to it again. Sometimes they chanced upon other wolves, usually in pairs; but there was no friendliness of intercourse displayed on either side, no gladness at meeting, no desire to return to the pack-formation. Several times they encountered solitary wolves. These were always males, and they were pressing insistently on joining with One Eye and his mate. This he resisted, and when she stood shoulder to shoulder with him, bristling and showing her teeth, the aspiring solitary ones would back off, turn tail, and continue on their lonely way.

One moonlight night, running through the quiet forest, One Eye suddenly halted. His muzzle went up, his tail stiffened, and his nostrils dilated as he scented the air. One foot also he held up, after the manner of a dog. He was not satisfied, and he continued to smell the air, striving to understand the message borne upon it to him. One careless sniff had satisfied his mate and she trotted on to reassure him. Though he followed her, he was still dubious, and he could not forbear an occasional halt in order more carefully to study the warning.

She crept out cautiously on the edge of a large open space in the midst of the trees. For some time she stood alone. Then One Eye, creeping and crawling, every sense on the alert, every hair radiating infinite suspicion, joined her. They stood side by side, watching and listening and smelling.

To their ears came the sounds of dogs warring and scuffling, the guttural cries of men, the sharper voices of scolding women, and once the shrill and plaintive cry of a child.

With the exception of the huge bulks of the skin lodges, little could be seen save the flames of the fires, broken by the movements of intervening bodies, quiet air. But to their nostrils came and the smoke rising slowly on the myriad smells of an Indian camp, carrying a story that was largely incomprehensible to One Eye but every detail of which the she-wolf knew.

She was strangely stirred, and sniffed and sniffed with an increasing delight. But old One Eye was doubtful. He betrayed his apprehension, and started tentatively to go. She turned and touched his neck with her muzzle in a reassuring way, then regarded the camp again. A new whiff of smoke was in her face, but it was not the whiff of smoke. She was thrilling to a desire that urged her to go forward, to be in closer to that fire, to be snuggling with the dogs, and to be avoiding and dodging the stumbling feet of men. One Eye moved impatiently beside her; her unrest came back upon her, and she knew again her pressing need to find the thing for which she searched. She turned and trotted back into the forest, to the great relief of One Eye, who trotted a little to the fore until they were well within the shelter of the trees. As they slid along, noiseless as shadows, in the moonlight, they came upon a runaway. Both noses went down to the footprints in the snow. These footprints were very fresh. One Eye ran ahead cautiously, his mate at his heels. The broad ends of their feet were spread wide in contact with the snow were like velvet. One Eye caught sight of a dim movement of white in the midst of the white. His sliding gait had been deceptively swift, but it was as nothing to the speed at which he now ran. Before him was bounding the faint patch of white he had discovered. They were running along a narrow alley flanked on either side by a growth of young spruce. Through the trees the mouth of the alley could be seen, opening out on a moonlight glade. Old One Eye was rapidly overhauling the fleeing shape of white. Bound by bound he gained. Now he was upon it. One leap more and his teeth would be sinking into it. But that leap was never made. High in the air, and straight up, soared the shape of white, now a struggling snowshoe rabbit that leaped and bounded, executing a fantastic dance there above him in the air and never once returning to earth. One Eye sprang back with a snort of sudden fright, then shrank down to the snow and crouched, snarling threats at this thing of fear he did not understand. But the she-wolf coolly thrust past him. She poised for a moment, then sprang for the fleeing rabbit. She, too, soared high, but not so high as the quarry, and her teeth clipped emptily together with a metallic snap. She made another leap, and another. Her mate had slowly relaxed from his crouch and was watching her. He now evinced displeasure at her repeated failures, and himself made a mighty spring upward. His teeth closed upon the rabbit, and he bore it back to earth with him. But at the same time there was a suspicious crackling movement beside him, and he astonished eye saw a young spruce sapling bending down above him to strike him. His jaws let go their grip, and he leaped backward to escape this strange danger, his lips drawn back from his fangs, his throat snarling, every hair bristling with rage and fright. And at that moment the sapling reared its slender upright trunk, and the rabbit soared dacing in the air again. The she-wolf was angry. She sank her fangs into her mate's shoulder in reproach, and he, frightened, unaware of what constituted this new onslaught, struck back furiously and in still greater fright, ripping down the side of the she-wolf's muzzle. For him to resume such reproach was equally unexpected to her, and she sprang upon him in snarling indignation. Then he discovered his mistake and tried to placate her. But she proceeded to punish him roundly, until he gave over all attempts at placation, and whirled in a circle, his head away from her, his shoulders receiving the punishment of her teeth. In the meantime the rabbit danced above them in the air. The she-wolf sat down in the snow, and old One Eye, now more in fear of his mate than of the mysterious sapling, again sprang for the rabbit. As he sank back with it between his teeth, he kept his eye on the sapling. As before, it followed him back to earth. He crouched down under the impending blow, his hair bristling, but his teeth still keeping tight hold of the rabbit. But the blow did not fall. The sapling remained bent above him. When he moved it moved, and he growled at it through his clenched jaws; when he remained still, it remained still, and he concluded it was safer to continue remaining still. Yet the warm blood of the rabbit tasted good in his mouth. It was his mate who relieved him from the quandary in which he found himself. She took the rabbit from him, and while the sapling swayed and teetered threateningly above her she calmly gnawed off the rabbit's head. At once the sapling shot up, and after that gave no more trouble, remaining in the decorous and perpendicular position in which nature had intended it to grow. Then, between them, the she-wolf and One Eye devoured the game which the mysterious sapling had caught for them. There were other runways and alleys where rabbits were hanging in the air, and the wolf-pair prospected them all, the she-wolf leading the way, old One Eye following and observing, learning the method of robbing snares—a knowledge destined to stand him in good stead in the days to come.

'A Woman's Business' To Be Shown At Woman's Club

Governor and Mrs. Clifford Walker will be among the invited guests for Tuesday evening when the Atlanta Woman's club will present the popular film, "A Woman's Business," as adapted from the novel, "Nothing in a Year," by Charles Belmont Davis, and which features Olive Tell, a noted dramatic star of the screen.

Mrs. Norman Sharp, president of the Woman's club, is assisting Mrs. W. P. Dunn, chairman of motion pictures, in the club, in arranging this occasion.

The cast contains the names of several famous stage and screen favorites. Edmund Lowe plays, opposite Miss Tell in an exacting role that he handles with telling effect. Mr. Lowe has been playing all season in New York in David Belasco's great success, "The Son-Daughter." He is considered by critics one of the most capable young actors of America.

Fair-Weather Wives

BY MILDRED BARBOUR

ANOTHER COMPLICATION.

Marjorie replaced the telephone receiver on the hook and swung round to face Tom Grosvenor, with a little cry of surprise and pleasure.

"Tom, when—how—?"

He swept her into his arms and laid his cheek against her soft curls. She clung to him. The bit of tenderness after the strain of her interview of Dan was too much for her self-control. She cried into Tom's gray tweed shoulder.

"The message?" she asked wonderingly.

"Then it came to her in a panicky flash. The ordeal she had gone through with Dan had driven everything else from her mind, even the high-hearted plans for her freedom."

She remembered now with what gay assurance that things were coming out right at last, she had asked Marjorie Hollister would soon be free.

And now, in one black instant of realization, she knew that she could not be free. She would have to go on as Hollister's wife, receiving his charity and paying it out as the price of silence for Dan's sordid escapade. Once more the door was closed upon her escape. Once more the vision of happiness faded her horizon. Once more she put her hurt bitter pride in her pocket, and smiled bravely in the face of a gray, hopeless future.

The shackles of her bondage closed more firmly than ever about her. Telling Tom this was harder than facing the reality.

"Tom, dear," she said gently, "when I sent that message, I meant it with all my heart. By the time you came, I had hoped, expected, to be free to marry you. . . . But something has happened, something terrible that makes it impossible."

He took her roughly by one slim shoulder. "You mean you are fooling me? You aren't free? You aren't getting free?"

"Yes." The word was scarcely audible. "I don't believe you," he said curtly.

ly. "I don't think you're as lacking in squareness as that. I won't believe that you're an unscrupulous flit, ready to encourage me, promise me anything—and snatch it back when I try to take it."

He looked at her searchingly and his eyes were hard and suspicious. Marjorie felt very weary and she wanted tenderness so desperately.

Why, she wondered, had she ever expected it from Tom? He was such a volcano if things didn't go to his liking.

"I am very sorry," she said slowly and with a touch of dignity that sat appealingly on her frail, girlish shoulders. "There is no help for the trying situation in which I find myself. It isn't alone who am involved, please believe that. I have to think of other people."

"Why not think about me, for a change?" he broke in rudely. "You don't care what you do to me, do you? You care what you do to me? How much you keep me hopping around on the end of a string like a fool monkey? It's certainly a curious attitude for a girl who professes to love me."

Marjorie stared at him speculatively. Again she was asking herself if she really loved him, if all this black despair she felt was because she was unable to marry him? Or was it the despair of pride which could not be victimized by the knowledge that she would have to go on being married to Hollister, to a man she dreaded, and continue to accept his charity for herself and her family and her family's misdeeds?

"Tell the truth, why don't you?" insisted Grosvenor brutally. "See if you really care. Why don't you say right out that you don't love me?"

"Tom, dear," she said gently, "you're being unkind because your pride is hurt. I know what hurt pride is. I know nothing else these days. Please don't let us discuss this now while you are angry. Come back this evening, or tomorrow, and we can talk things over sanely."

"No!" he refused violently. "It's now or never. I want an answer once and for all. Are you going to get rid of Hollister and marry me—or aren't you?"

Marjorie passed a hand wearily over her forehead. "I don't know," she answered truthfully. "I—"

But he didn't wait for the amended reply. "The French window had already banged behind him."

THIS BRIGHT BABY GIRL

Brought Joy to Home. Mrs. Price's Health Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Scottdale, Pa.—"I never felt like working, and when I would get any work done, I would just drag around all day long. At times I would have terrible pains and would be in bed three or four days. I was in this condition about a year when I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the papers. I had heard different women say it was good for women's troubles, and my aunt thought it would help me as it had helped her. So I took the Vegetable Compound and it brought things right, and I was in good shape before I became a mother again. I believe it helps at birth, too, as both my other babies suffered a great deal more than with this one. I thank you a thousand times for the good your medicine has done me."

—Mrs. ROBERT PRICE, Scottdale, Pa.

6 COUNTS UPHeld AGAINST SInGLAR

Washington, July 14.—Six of the ten counts in the indictment of Harry F. Singlar for contempt of the senate were sustained today in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Justice Hoehling ruled out questions asked of Singlar about the alleged contribution of Singlar consolidated stock to Will H. Hays, or some one representing the republican national committee, and transfer of funds from the National Park Bank of New York to the National Metropolitan Bank of Washington, as not pertinent. He also made the same decision on the final count which charged Singlar with refusing to answer any questions.

Time for New Plea.

Singlar was given 20 days to plead again. In reviewing the case, Justice Hoehling cited various precedents and following the general rule in such questions declared the issue of the authority of congress should be resolved against the defendant and in favor of the existence of the power to compel pertinent testimony in aid of the exercise of its legislative function, but excluding self-incrimination.

On the claim of counsel for Singlar that the senate, if it had authority to ask the questions, had deprived itself of jurisdiction by the resolution to refer the oil cases to the courts for determination, the opinion held that this was only a part of the subject matter of the senate inquiry, which he asserted still was unresolved.

In view of the far-reaching questions involved, Justice Hoehling made the date for Singlar's next move 20 days, which he said if Singlar would have reasonable opportunity to apply to the court of appeals for the allowance of a special appeal. This procedure, he said, was expedited the final decision by the supreme court of the United States, where he said ultimately is expected to be settled.

Six Questions Upheld.

The six questions the court held Singlar should have answered were: A request by the committee that Singlar testify, as to information given the committee by F. G. Bonifis, of Denver, about a contract made with Bonifis touching Teapot Dome.

The question asking about a contract whereby the committee prosecutor asserted the Pioneer Oil company ceased to be a competitor in the lease of Teapot Dome.

Information as to any agreement between Singlar and Secretary Fall, in which the committee "promised" to give Singlar a contract for an oil lease, which Singlar testified that he was to receive a certain portion of the territory covered by the lease Singlar secured from the Mammoth Oil company.

A question as to when and where Singlar last met Secretary Fall during the months of November and December last.

Whether Singlar was prepared to produce the books of the Hyva corporation, a Singlar family organization.

Whether Singlar's former testimony that he had never given or loaned anything to Secretary Fall was correct.

Chances Favor Buyer for Distant Cotton Positions, Says Theo. Price

BY THEODORE H. PRICE,
Editor, Commerce and Finance.
New York, July 14.—If the thermometer and barometer were prophets instead of being historians a forecast of the cotton market in the summer time would be less difficult. As it is all that can be said is that

But it must now be admitted that nothing serious has thus far happened to the crop and that each propitious day that passes puts the plant in a better condition to resist the high temperatures of August and the possible storms of the autumn.

It is generally recognized and the popular idea of the prospective yield is probably larger now than it was a week ago.

But however large the next crop may be it will not be available before the first of August and holders of contracts for July delivery in cotton are rather wide range in demand almost any price they choose to ask from those who are short. At the end of the week July was quoted at nearly five cents over October. In the cotton futures market this period this would have been regarded as exorbitant, but squeezes have now become so common that a premium of $25 a bale is hardly considered unearned. But it is not, nevertheless, and in order to avoid losing this premium on cotton they would usually carry over. Spinners are selling every bale they cannot use and the cotton crop is a considerable. Some of them are, in fact, closing their mills that they may sell their supply of unspun cotton, and others are making up their minds to shut down in the near future.

For all these reasons it seems premature to bear cotton upon the theory that the bumper crop will make some predict is certain to be picked and while this is not written, incite speculation, it must be said in candor that with conditions as they are the chances will probably be against the bumper crop of distant positions for at least another month.

A fairly active market has been witnessed in cottonseed oil during the past week. Fluctuations have been rather wide range, and new high levels for the movement were scored for all months. Final quotations were 62 to 85 points higher than a year ago. In the first of January, which only show a 44-point advance from the previous year's close.

The situation in cottonseed oil continues to be favorable to the consumer, and the cottonseed oil improvement has revealed the existence of a fair-sized speculative short interest which is displaying greater uncertainty than in the past. A sharp advance in lard and a further tightening in the spot situation. Leading trade interests report a good consuming demand, which has not been met by the recent upturn. A continuation of this demand will optimism that the nomination of John W. Davis has engendered. No opinion with regard to his election is expressed or implied, but it is undoubtedly true that his selection is regarded as a triumph for conservatism, and it is for that reason viewed with satisfaction by most business men in this part of the country. Therefore, their will probably forecasts a much smaller supply later in the season and should result in a curtailment in the production of lard at that time. In view of this fact it will be necessary to have a fair-sized cotton crop to make a liberal supply of oil to offset the increased demand which would be diverted to oil with the smaller lard production.

Cruise has made for Paramount from Emory's House's immortal novel. Words cannot describe the bigness of this picture. It fairly lives and breathes the life of our hardy ancestors who crossed the plains and mountains in the days of '49 in search of homes and following the magnetic drawing power of gold in California. A romantic love story lives through the entire picture and finds ultimate happiness in the last fifty feet of film. The overture is particularly appropriate as it features the highlights in "The Covered Wagon" musical score used by Mr. Risinger.

"The Bedroom Window."

(At the Rialto.)
 May McAvoy and Malcolm MacGregor, supported by a cast that must be rated at least at par, present a very fine specimen of the photoplay art at the Rialto theatre this week in "The Bedroom Window." It has to do with a mysterious murder in which the fiancée of the heroine and nearly a dozen others are suspected and which is solved by a woman writer of detective fiction. The program is rounded out by a Fox comedy called "The Monkey Farm" that is very laughable. The International Newsreel and incidental music by Whitney Huber's musicians.

Colleen Moore.

(At the Metropolitan.)
 Colleen Moore once again corals all honors as the perfect flapper of the screen.

This time, the dainty First National star wins the jazz age sweepstakes in a photoplay entitled "The Perfect Flapper," which opened at the Metropolitan theatre Monday.

Colleen wears some smart and beautiful gowns which will delight the eye of the feminine patron, while the party scenes and the most blasé movie-goer thrills of a new variety.

The cast is of exceptional merit and has been perfectly selected. Frank Mayo, Sydney Chaplin, Lydia Knott and Charles Wellesley are able supports.

At the Paramount.
